Livestock Fattening in the Production of Animal Products and Permissibility of These Products in Islam

Today, issues such as how the animals are fed and what kind of products are used while feeding the animals is crucial in terms of religious criteria. Especially, in modern livestock fattening, the raw materials of animal origin are mixed into the animal foods. The issue of feeding in the production of animal products has been studied by comparing with “jallâlah” (animals eating excrement) as mentioned in classical Islamic law resources. As a result, it is concluded that consuming the products of the animals which are fed with the excrements is objectionable from the perspective of Islamic law (Fiqh).
