The purpose of this study is to introduce the literature of the price discovery in index futures and spot markets from 1982 to date and also to explain the factors affecting markets’ price discovery role. In this respect, the subject is handled in terms of developed and developing country markets. In addition to index futures and spot markets, the contributions of ETF and options markets to price discovery are examined and then the price discovery role of satellite markets are investigated.