Artificial food colourings (AFC) and additives are among the most used items in today's daily life. Some research studies suggest that exposure to AFC and additives can affect some processes such as behaviour, learning and development in children. In this study, we aimed to investigate the effect of exposure to AFC during intrauterine period on behaviour and memory in adult period.