ABSTRACT

The museum can be defined as the bridge between past and current time. To be able to bridge the past with current time, several display objects are required. How does that museum sound if the theme of the museum is “democracy and development”? This constitutes the scope of our study. “Süleyman Demirel Democracy and Development Museum” formed in Süleyman Demirel’s name, a prominent figure in Turkish politics, shall be investigated within the scope of our study. Having been named after Süleyman Demirel, who had had a career as a Prime Minister for 12 years and President for 7 years, the museum is a significant research center for the researchers and scholars who are interested in Turkish politics.