Recently there is strong interest in wearable electronics (e-textile) to meet the technological demands of modern society. In this project, an innovative conductive yarn production method was suggested. The developed innovative method, a combination of nanotechnology with traditional methods, could make possible the production of wearable electronics that flexible, excellent conductivity, lightweight, washable and durable to mechanic deformations like bending, twisting, and stretching.