

EMPLOYEES WORKING IN THE 19TH CENTURY OTTOMAN ARCHITECTURAL ACTIVITIES AND THEIR WAGES

The 19th century is the era when the westernization effects are most seen in the Otoman architecture. The religious and civil architectural works of this era are greatly under the influence of the western style. The influences of architects, experts and employees are extremely important. In the architectural formation, employees' titles, hierarchical positions, working fields and wages are important in respect of the social life of the era. About employees and wages, this work will be an analysis towards the determination of the economic effects in the building of the structures taking place in the architectural activities and the employees' position in the era. I hope this work, in which a rare - studied topic in the architectural activities of Turkish History of Art is considered, will get other works started in the related topic.
