Prior to the First World War, countries established alliances among themselves in their own interests, and this bloc began in 1882 with an agreement with Germany, the Austro-Hungarian Empire and Italy. However, Italy later declared its neutrality, citing the pretext that the Austro-Hungarian Empire, which had begun the First World War, acted without consulting it.