Abstract
During the 2000s, the extreme right-wing parties in Europe were supported by the wider public and experienced a significant outflow. In these years, the extreme right has been the ruling party or main opposition party in many countries. Today, the far right continues to be the leading political actors in the European countries, as well as in the developed countries of the world and in countries such as the USA, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, which are considered as examples of liberal democracy. This progress stems from the increase in migration mobility towards Europe in recent years.
In this study, the causes and consequences of international migration movements will be discussed, as well as anti-immigrant policies of the far right political parties in Western societies. The hypothesis of the study is that there are concerns about security, welfare loss and cultural heterogeneity behind immigration in Europe. It is also emphasized that the increasing reaction towards the right-wing parties, which are based on anti-immigrant policies, is being strengthened day by day. Key Words: Migration, Security, Extreme Right, Globalization, Pathology of Normalcy, Welfare Chauvinism.
