As a parallel to the industrialization and social improvements, urbanization is a process of population accumulation which results in the increase of the number of cities and the growing of existing cities. It is also the process which forms independence, cooperation and specialization at an arising rate in society structure and causes changes unique to cities in human behaviors and the relations among them.